Having knowledge of human rights holds utmost significance in understanding and engaging with socio-political issues and challenges in present times. Human rights are commonly understood as the basic moral standards that recognize and protect the dignity of all human beings. These rights are inherited by every individual at the time of birth only on the ground that they are born as human being. Human rights are universal, inalienable, interdependent and absolute in nature. Every human being irrespective of class, caste, gender, language, religion, region and any other status is entitled to these rights. The concept got popularised and universalised after the establishment of United Nations. Promoting and protecting human rights is one of the core purposes of the United Nations. Hence, it is reflected in all UN policies and programmes in the key areas of peace, security, development, economic and social affairs etc. Human rights are the guiding principles to govern how individual human being live in society with each other; what kind of relationship the state and the individual maintain as well as how much obligations the state should have towards individual human being.
